Do you miss those old days of the internet age when the spread of strange things was limited by, well, the limitations of dial-up Internet?

The Beanie Bubble, a new Apple TV Plus film, is a comedy that will educate you all about the beanie baby trend in the early nineties.

Beanie Babies' demand for toys reached an all-time high, breaking the internet — or at least eBay, where people traded for up to ten times more than the MSRP.

THE BEANIE BUBBLE FILM IS GETTING ITS PREMIERE.

The Beanie Bubble will be released in select theaters on July 21. If you can't see it there, you can catch it on Apple TV+ on July 28.

The first trailer provides an excellent insight into what this film is about, but we'll leave you with a few nice documentary options to watch until then.

WHAT IS THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE BEANIE BUBBLE?

"Why did the world suddenly treat stuffed animals like gold?" is the official synopsis. Ty Warner was a frustrated toy salesman until he collaborated with three women to create the largest toy craze in history.

The Fallout-Like Silo Series on Apple TV+ has become the number one streaming show.

For those who couldn't wait to witness the beanie mania in the 90s, you can also check out HBO Max's Beanie Mania documentary. It's available now for viewing.

Vice Media's Beanie Babies go bust documentary is also a fascinating read – see who is playing in the Apple TV+ film below.

THE BEANIE BUBBLE CAST IS AN INTERESTING ONE.

The Beanie Bubble movie on Apple TV+ should provide a great starting point. The cast is quite diverse.

This film features Zach Galifianakis, Elizabeth Banks, Sarah Snook, and Geraldine Viswanathan. Both Julia Farino, who was last seen in Foundation, is also featured. Tracey Bonner, who you probably saw in Kobra Kai, is also featured.

Damian Kulash, well-known for The Amazing Spiderman 2 and Joss Whedon's The Cabin in the Woods, is the director of The Beanie Bubble, as well as Kristin Gore, a former SNL writer and producer on Foxcatcher.
